

Feni secured without firing a single shot

The battered morale of the armed Indian infiltrators and miscreants was squarely evident in Feni town of Noakhali district, which was secured by Pakistan Army over the last weekend, writes APP's special correspondent. Shaukat Kamal, just returned from Comilla area.

When columns of Pakistan Army entered Feni town after clearing the pockets of Indian infiltrators and miscreants, they encountered absolutely no resistance.

An army field officer, returning from Feni, told me in Comilla that Pakistan Army entered Feni without firing a single shot. The armed Indian infiltrators and anti-state elements had fled in panic for their lives from the area when Pakistani troops moved in. They left behind large quantities of arms, ammunition and other belongings.

Some of the arms and ammunition, recovered from Feni, had the markings of Kikri Ordnance Factory in India, proving that India had been openly sending infiltrators into the area and was also helping the "Mukti Bahini", the militant wing of the banned Awami League. I myself saw in Comilla some of the Indian arms and ammunition captured by Pakistan Army.

Feni, which is a few miles from the Indian border, had large concentration of the Indian armed infiltrators and miscreants and All-India Radio had been brewing out concocted stories that the forward march of Pakistani troops had been halted by the so called "Mukti Bahini".

The All-India Radio kept on unpacking the load of lies about Feni, even two days after Pakistan Army had secured the area. Some residents of Feni informed Pakistan Army officers that before the Pakistan Army moved into Feni some armed Indian infiltrators had entered the area on the pretext of safeguarding the important railway bridge at Shahdadpur as a support to the so-called "Bangia Desh" army but instead blew up the bridge and then fled back to India.
